In December 2018, the Katowice Climate Package was adopted - the global work plan for how to implement the Paris Agreement and curb global warming to 1.5°C. The agreement comes at a critical time, when the impacts of climate change are being felt across the world and scientists warn that we only have 12 years left to limit catastrophic impacts. So what does the Katowice Climate Package offer and what were some of the forces that shaped the agreement?

KIARA WORTH, photographer and storyteller, will share a photographic overview of what happened in these negotiations and question whether this is enough to seriously address climate change. With photographs published in the Guardian and the BBC, this seminar will give you a glimpse into the global processes and politics that shape our world.

Kiara has worked all over the world, notably in Papua New Guinea, as a photojournalist and publications developer. A writer, photographer, sustainable development consultant and world traveller, she believes united and inspired action can promote positive change. She has experience in training, facilitation and empowerment and has worked internationally for the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development, and private institutions.

She currently works for the International Institute for Sustainable Development, as a member of the Earth Negotiations Bulletin (ENB) team providing daily information from multilateral negotiations on the environment and development.
